

PROOFREADING & EDITING

- Proofreading: Spell- and grammar-checking, concentrating on individual words rather than the context.
- Copy editing: The goal of a copy edit is to make sure the writing that appears on the page is consistent in spelling, capitalisation, hyphenation etc; it also ensures the internal consistency of your work (no discrepancies in plot, setting, character traits). This is like an incredibly high-end proofread.
- Line editing: A line edit addresses the creative content, writing style, and language use at the sentence and paragraph level – it focuses on the way language is used to communicate the story to the reader.
- Developmental edit: A full edit addresses all the elements of your writing, from creative content, writing style, and language used to communicate your story to the reader, to overall structure and style.

The usual procedure: developmental & line editing, copy editing, proofreading – proofreading is the final stage before your manuscript will be published.
